

Since the inception of satellite radio I did not have any "real" radio to listen to in my area. Our airwaves are bombarded by urban and tejano music, needless to say I despise both of those types of music. Then ClearChannel moved in and they are telling me what I should listen to...I don't think so! When the lobbyists are pitching a fit about XM and Sirius, the FCC should be scrutinizing ClearChannel 10 fold. I was under the impression we lived in the United States of America and that free enterprise was one of our rights? Maybe I am wrong?

The satellite compnaies are such a small part of the market share and should be left alone by the mega- corporations...If we pay for our radio that is our choice, and if they can provided with weather and accident reports to better help their "paying" customers, so be it. This not the concern of the AM/FM radio stations....we are not paying them for services, so they all should pipe down and play the music they think we should listen to.
